Frequently Asked Questions

What is the difference between a 2D, 3D and 4D ultrasound?

A 2D ultrasound is the usual black and white image that will help you perceive shadows of the outline of your baby's face, body and internal organs. A 3D ultrasound is a still 3-dimensional picture. The fourth dimension allows you to see your baby in live motion. 4D ultrasounds are sometimes referred to as a live 3D ultrasound.

When is a good time to do a 4D ultrasound?

4D ultrasounds can be done at any time during pregnancy. We find that the optimal time period for a 4D ultrasound is between 26 and 32 weeks, when the baby has more fat on its body but still has room to move around. After 32 weeks, the baby may be too large to capture a good picture.

What if my baby is not in a position to get a picture?

The quality of the ultrasound image depends on the baby's position and movement, as well as the mother's size and weight.

If the pictures are unsatisfactory, you will be offered a single return visit at no additional charge. However, this will be at the discretion of the ultrasound technician. If a good image is still not captured, you will receive a refund, less a $50 session fee.

Do I need a full bladder?

While you should remain well hydrated, you do not need a full bladder for your 4D ultrasound.

Are 4D ultrasounds safe?

Yes, the ultrasound machine we use (GE Voluson S6) is approved by the FDA for obstetrical ultrasound. It uses ultrasound energy subject to the same limitations as conventional 2D ultrasound to create the 3D/4D images. Ultrasound has been used for more than 40 years to evaluate pregnancies and no negative effects have been found on the baby.

May I bring friends and family to my 4D ultrasound?

Yes. Our space is limited, but we accommodate families to the best of our abilities. There is standing room for about five guests. Make your appointment in advance to reserve the most convenient time for you and your family.
